Seminary Summer & Islamic Internship for Worker Justice

Explore the connections between faith and social justice

The Seminary Summer & Islamic Internship for Worker Justice is a ten-week paid internship for seminary, rabbinical, and Muslim graduate students combining education, action, and reflection. Participants will be placed at labor unions around the country to support campaigns involving workers in low-wage jobs. Through hands-on experiences, interns will help educate and mobilize the religious community to stand with workers on workplace issues.

“The impact and power of interfaith work is undeniable in working toward a more just world.”

Ben Greenberg, Seminary Summer/IIWJ

Dates: June 6 – August 13, 2010
